And if you find that some of the links don't work, you can always do a quick internet search of what exactly is called for (and of course, do some more research on your own). Discover new knowledge here!

With the advancement in technology it is also wise to investigate new ways that can help solve ongoing problems without spending money or amassing an army of experts. One such technology is blockchain (a digital ledger with no single entity controlling it). Blockchain technology can be used to store medical records, prove ownership of items, track cars and even allow people to sell their unused computer resources.

During the 1970s, the U.S. government began making contributions towards nuclear weapons testing in the Marshall Islands. This ended up despoiling many islands, including Rongelap Atoll, which is part of the Kwajalein Atoll. For example on Rongelap Atoll at the time of testing, radioactive fallout contaminated substantial areas of land on Rongelap that are still not cleansed or cleaned up to this day. Also, the island of Rongerik Atoll is now uninhabitable. Recently, the U.S. government has made an effort to clean up the islands, although there are still several radioactive hot spots on them today. All in all, this situation illustrates one point: When nuclear weapons are tested anywhere by any country, there are bound to be severe consequences to the environment and surrounding areas.

Election interference has been a popular topic in recent years with allegations that Russia interfered with the 2016 presidential election and other elections before that it claims to have influenced.

Cyberattacks are fundamentally different from any sort of physical attack that could be conducted through things like bombs or bullets. Instead, cyberattacks are conducted with computers, web browsers or network devices. While some attacks are simple computer viruses that can be easily avoided with some prevention measures, some attacks are very sophisticated and difficult to block. For example, in April 2017 some unknown person or group hacked into the computers of the US Homeland Security Department and some other government agencies. To keep the hackers at bay they had to install new software on their own computer systems that had to be downloaded from the Internet before they could use their internet connection again.
